"BIG TIM" SULLIVAN IS HOME.

GLAD OF IT, TOO, THOUGH HE SAW MANY SIGHTS.

Wants to Get Back to Senate at Albany as Fast as Friends Will Let Him-Municipal Ownership a Cinch for Tammany Paris Shocked Him-Saw Croker.

The Hon. Timothy D. Sullivan is home from his holiday in Europe. He arrived vesterday morning on the Cunard liner Campania. "Little Tim," or, officially, Alderman Timothy P. Sullivan and Col. Mike Padden, "Big Tim's" military secretary, wearing plain clothes by request, met the Congressman and his suite at Quarantine. The suite included the following well known statesmen and men of letters: Jack McAuliffe and the Hons. Westhouse, Steinberger and Downing.

The Bowery in particular and the entire East Side in general had planned a recep-tion worthy of the home coming of the Czar of the East Side. Mr. Sullivan heard of the plans and headed them off by cable. He wanted no fleet of tugs and battery of brass bands to toot and bray a welcome home at him. Therefore, Only "Little Tim" and Col. Mike went down the bay.

On the Cunard pier, however, there was a goodly company to meet the ship and its distinguished passenger. There was a delegation from the Metamora Club and Larry Mulligan was there, attended by numerous members of the Lawrence Mulligan Association. So were the old guard of the Occidental Hotel and Senator Fitzgerald, who took the "Big Fellow's" place in the State Senate when Timothy D. con-cluded to go to Congress himself, instead of intrusting the interests of the district to the Hon. Perry Belmont.

But Timothy D. won't run for Congress again, even to please the biggest carpet merchant that ever lived. He himself bath said it. The cheers that greeted him as he stepped down the Campania's gangplank had hardly died away when, replying to the first question he caught of the gross or two popped at him, the Congress-

"Not any more of Washington for me not if it were handed upon a gold plate. it's all right, but it's too far away from the Bowery. I want to go back to my o.d place in the Senate just as soon as my friends will send me there."

And that ended Mr. Sullivan's remarks en things political. He wouldn't be drawn into anything that had any resemblance to a discussion of the local political situa-

"Cut out politics," he said to his interviewers. "I'm an organization man and that covers the ground-my virtues and my sins. But let me tell you this: If we had municipal ownership in New York, Tammany would be in power for the next 150 years. Chicago imported a Scotchman to instruct the Chicagoese in municipal ownership. He came from Glasgow, I think. Why, say, in Glasgow they are talking of disfranchising the employees on the tramways because the reformers over there-they're ones on the outs, just like they are here-say the votes of the men are controlled by the party in power. Give us municipal ownership in New York and Gabriel will find Tammany ruling New York when he blows the wake-up

Just then some one asked the Congressman about Mr. Croker. Like a flash the goodnatured smile that had been playing over the "Big Fellow's" bronzed race vanished and the big blue eyes became vanished and the big blue eyes became gravel, sad.

"I visited Mr. Croker in Ireland," he replied, "and I was handsomely entertained. He has a splendid place there and a great breeding establishment. He heads the list of winning owners on the Irish turf, and among his horses in training he has two or three that are believed to be the fastest in Britain.

in Britain.

"But the old gentleman is little like the Croker you and I used to know. The death of his two sons has saddened and subqued the same like a man burdened with him. He seems like a man burdened with a weight of sorrow almost greater than he can bear. His hair and beard are almost white and the old time vigor and fire which he had when he was our leader have gone. There is no longer the set of the jaw and the backward tilt of the head that we all knew meant a fight. He is bearing his sorrow courageously, but the memory of his boys is always with him. I do not think he will ever visit this country again, but he asked particularly after old friends and he will never lose interest in the weifare of Tammany Hall."

"What about Paris?" the Congressman

What about Paris?" the Congressman was asked.
"It's the wickedest place I ever saw and I'm strong enough to stand a bit of a jolt. Any reformer that compares New York to Paris ought to be jailed for the rest of his natural life. Paris is the permanent ad-dress of the Old Nick. I would rather see York at the bottom of the ocean than "There is another funny thing about Paris to IAC; why, on the level, every other person I met while I was in Paris was a New Yorker. There are a heap of good Gothamites in Paris. I even found one of my constituents in France. One of the guides at Napoleon's tomb, who was showing me about said: 'How do you do, Tim; don't you remember me? I am French John, from around Fulton Market. I voted for you last election.' voted for you last election.'

It was French John, sure enough, and I

From an artistic standpoint we have nothing like it in this country."

Some one else asked the Congressman what he thought of King Edward.

"He is the most democratic man you could meet," he replied. "No guards or detectives follow him, and he walks around just like any well-to-do New Yorker, smoking his cigar at an angle.

"I saw him at three racetracks, which in England are very uncomfortable places sil to $20 to see a race in England, it is a most popular sport.

"On Bank Holiday there were 115,000 people at the track. But the prices, accommodations and betting facilities are not for the plain people. In France they manage things differently.

"I have seen many sights since I have been away that greatly interested me, but I'm a better American than ever for the glimpse I got of the Old World. Here there's a chance for every one, and the best man wins. There caste and class rule. The land for the poor man is the land of your Uncle Samuel.

"The condition of the working classes in England is bad. Take a London cabman, for instance. He pays $3.50 for the hire of two horses and a cab daily, works fourteen hours and then has only about eight shillings, or two dollars, a week for his family.

"On Sunday the workingman must stay his family.

On Sunday the workingman must stay in town if he takes a day off, because it would cost him 62 cents fare to go eight miles outside of London. There are many leautiful resorts, like Hampton Court, Richmond and Margate, but the fares are prohibitive to the poor.

No man need be without employment in London, but one of the saddest things I saw was men of 50 to 60 selling newspapers. matches and other articles for a living. There are no newsboys and there seems to be no hope for the future.

"London has a splendid excise law, be-cavee, by opening the pubs at eleven s'clock on Sundays, they give the poor people some latitude. The result of that is that the people live up to the text of the law, and no one wants to break it. I didn't find the same conditions existing in Ireland. There they don't let the pub keeper open on Sunday, but you can bet that when an Irishman wants a drink on Sunday he knows how to get it. The law says that any traveler who comes three miles or over is entitled to liquid refreshments, so every Paddy with a Sabbath day thirst hoofs three miles an gets his thirst appeased.

"They are very strict with the Irish people. Too strict, I think. It causes lots of hard feelings and many hardships. I don't like the idea of the Irish constabulary armed like soldiers and drilled like soldiers. The guns they have are loaded too, and when those constables shoot they shoot to kill.

"You know I'm going to build a hotel on the East Side when I can find the land I want. One reason I went over the pond was to git some ideas for the hotel. Well, I saw some of their ac-called model houses. They're either a joke or a tragedy. They're called 'model' by Act of Parliament. But it's all in the name. The majority of even the pocrtenements on the East Side have the 'model' houses over there beat a mile."

"See Dr. Parkhurst?" asked an interviewer.

"No," replied Mr. Sullivan, smiling.

"No," replied Mr. Sullivan, smiling.
"The doctor isn't in my set. But I saw Danny Maher. He's the most popular jockey in England, seems to have a cinch on all the races over a mile and is third on the list of winning jockeys."

"Not much," was the answer. "The most of the passengers were homecoming Americans, and a swell chance gamblers would have had with them. Why, an American returning from a tour of Europe is as shy of money as a frog is of feathers."

After the Congressman had denied that he was at the head of a big syndicate that was going to buy Bronx real estate for a rise he and his friends went to the Occidental Hotel, Broome street and the Bowery, where a reception was held. Before noon the "Big Fell w" had permitted New York to swallow him, and those who looked for him after that found not even a faint trail to lead them his way.

OPEN AIR SERVICE CAMPAIGN Preaching Every Day in Wall Street, Hell's Kitchen and Little Italy.

The evangelistic tent campaign in Man-hattan and The Bronx is in full swing. Every day in Wall street an Episcopal clergyman preaches to the bulls and the bears. He has no singer to attract attention. He simply puts on his black gown, mounts a stool and reads from the Bible. Usually he gets a good crowd. In Union Square every day another Episcopal clergyman preaches in the open air before a big throughout the day the eastern hills have resounded with the booming of artillery and clatter of musketry.

The problem outlined for to-day was a demonstration by the maneuvers of the troops of the attack of a position. The opposing forces, officered by Capts. Stewart and Newbold, were uniformed in brown and in blue, respectively. The maneuver included a retreat of the brown force toward rishkill through Cold Spring. Its commander detached a rear guard, consisting of four pieces of artillery, one troop of cavalry and one company of infantry, to delay the advance of the blue force and also to cover the crossing of Foundry Brook by the main body. The blue force had an advance guard of five companies of infantry and ten pieces of artillery.

The brown force occupied a suitable position and endeavored to intercept the blue force, but the latter after several strategic movements dislodged the brown force and caused it to fall back. After a hard day's toil the army went into camp for the night at Nelsonville, at the eastern boundary of Cold Springs.

MEADVILLE, Pa., Aug. 19.—Miss Eleaner
Marie Connors, niece of Mrs. Margaret A.
Bence of 130 West Seventy-second street,
New York city, and Dr. Bryan De Forest Sheedy of 10 West Forty-sixth street, New York, were married here this morning. The ceremony was performed by the Rt. Rev.
Mgr. Dunn, in the presence of a few relatives and friends. Since the beginning of summer the bride has been at Cambridge Springs with her aunt. She and Dr. Sheedy had been much together, but no engagement had been announced. It is understood that the wedding was hastened because Dr. Sheedy was called unexpectedly to Newfoundland. To that place they departed on their wedding tour. In the fall they will take up their residence at 162 West Seventy-third street, New

"YORK STATE FOLKS" IN TOWN

A PLAY NEW TO THE CITY OPENS THE MAJESTICS SEASON.

A Fresh Version of the Bural Drama, in Which, Buccile Wit and a Little of the Pathes of Simple Lives Pleased Theaterful-Good Stage Setting.

"York State Folks" was the rural play which opened the autumn season at the Majestic Theatre last evening. It was the first presentation of the play in New York city, and a theaterful of people gave every evidence of being pleased with play and players. This latest specimen of the rural drama to be offered for the town's diversion -"a story of village life," by Arthur Sid-man, it is sub-captioned in the programfollows the approved lines of the old fashioned play, but without the "lifting" of interpolated incidents from familiar successful plays which sometimes mars the enjoyment of what is billed as new.

If individuals of the older or newer generations fail to recall exact counterparts of the houses and shops of Martinsville, where the scenes of the drama are laid, they will not be at any loss to recognize the character types who give the scenes life.

Simon Peter Martin, the village president (James Lackaye), the land poor owner of pretty much everything and everybody, leared if not wholly loved, and good old Myron Cooper, teacher of music (Ray L. Royce), faithful to a cherished memory of early felicity and hope, are old friends. It were needless and a thankless office to relate the story of their contrasted lives, and the wooings and worries of the youth of their families, whose life stories work for the entertainment of spectators ready to be pleased, and sure to be interested, ready or not, in the intense situations which here and there occur. It was not to women's eyes alone that handkerchiefs went in the trying moment of honesty's hardship, but let haste be made to say that the merry moments all but The Martinsville Banner and some of its readers reveal a rich bucolic humor which in the careful settings that Fred E. Wright, who produces the play, has provided, glows more brightly than cold Gotham type may make it. But the audience laughed upropriously at the Banner's observation, anent the news of Hiram Perkins's three day visit to New York. The Banner said that "New York will be lively while Hi is there!" And again there was a laugh when a loquacious bumpkin objected that crab apples "puckered your mouth," and long suffering Myron told him sweetly, and in truly rural kindness of heart, that "twere "no harm to draw your mouth in a little, Lem."

When Myron went for the heifer, he found that the charge for its keep was, in the skinflint's estimation, "about the wuth of the calf."

"I couldn't see it that way," said Myron "I couldn't see it that way," said Myron,
"but I told him if he'd keep the heifer two

And isn't this a new one out of "York felt "like a two-year-old," he proudly said, and the kindly Myron in his wisdom explained that he must mean "like a twoyear-old egg."

DAVID BISPHAM ARRIVES.

Barvione Says Wife Is Not Suing Him in English Courts-Good Operatic Outlook. David Bispham, the barytone, who arrived yesterday from Liverpool aboard the Cunarder Campania, and who will sing in opera here during the coming season, said there was no ground for the report that his wife was suing him in an English court for di-worce.

Mr. Bispham said he had had a fine vacation in England, simply loafing; that he did not know whether or not he would go to California this year, but if he did he would have to sing in all the cities along the route. He predicted a good operatic season, based on the engagement of the best talent.

CARNEGIE GIFTS ANNULLED. Ohio Cittee May Not Be Allowed to Comply

With Conditions COLUMBUS, Ohio., Aug. 19.-A decision handed down by the Circuit Court at Lebanon annuls all the conditional gifts for libraries in Ohio made by Andrew Carnegie. In all his gifts Carnegie has required that the city benefited shall guarantee a given sum in perpetuity for the maintenance of the library.

Taxpayers at Lebanon, where a Carnegie library was to be established, sued to enjoin the Council from making the contract with Carnegie to furnish the sum of $1,000 per year to support the library, pleading that the Burns law prevents the Council from making any contract for the expenditure of money that is not actually in the treasury at the time the contract is made.

The Common Pleas Court enjoined the contract and the Circuit Court upheld the injunction. Now the Carnegie library trustees appeal the case to the Supreme Court. Lawyers generally seem to feel that the Carnegie contract is a violation of the Burns law, and there is nothing for the Supreme Court to do but affirm the Lebanon decision.

In that event Mr. Carnegie, should he see fit to demand back the money already paid, would have a legal right to do so in all cases where he has already established libraries in Ohio. the Council from making the contract

"I'll take this umbrella," said the customer on a bright, sunshiny day, handing $3 to the saleswoman and starting to leave

"I gave you $3; that's the price marked on the tag."

"Oh, that's the rainy day price. We've had so much wet weather lately the stock-keepers have forgotten to put on the dry weather tags. You know, umbrellas and rain clothes are all marked up on mornings when it seems sure to rain. We make people pay for their lack of foresight. Here's your 75 cents change. Thank you; call again."

"See that man," said the drug clerk, pointing after a well dressed elderly man who had just distributed a handful of change among the four boxes which bore the appeals of a children's hospital, two the appeals of a children's hospital, two fresh air funds and the Salvation Army. He does that every week. It's a superstition with him. If he didn't give his tithe every week he believes that his business would be blasted or his wife run away or his children get the whooping cough. I happen to know that he buys a War 'ry every time it's offered to him in a cafe from the same promotings.

"I suppose he has a charitable disposition, but it's superstition that makes him give so regularly. There are about a dozen other weekly contributors of the same sort. Well, there might be more of 'em, seeing the good they do."

"Raining again, I see," said the Broadway dealer. "That means still more customers in the straw hat trade. We have sold just three times as many straw hats this season as in any five years. It's all due to this wet weather. Nothing turns a good hat bad in so short a time as rain. Men who ordinarily go the whole summer through with a single straw have had to buy four or five this year. All the dealers are ordering new lots. The wise ones who buy Panamas for next year at the low prices of the late season are also getting into the market."

Commuters hailing from nearby points in New Jersey and Long Island find the raising of squabs a moneymaking side line. Business men take kindly to this industry, prompted as much by pleasure as profit. These birds are ready for market when four weeks old. Breeders produce from eight to ten pairs every year. Many "gentlemen farmers" sell direct to hotels, realizing handsome margins of profit.

When Mrs. De Smith left her upper West Side apartment for a fortnight's visit with her parents in Massachusetts she had serious misgivings about the care of her chief domestic joy, a fine collection of palms and rubber plants. Her husband had promised to water them faithfully, but she was not inclined to take chances, so she chirography:

"Do not forget to water the plants. These she tacked in conspicuous places These she tacked in conspicuous places, above his shaving mirror, on the shade of his reading lamp, above the telephone.
On reaching home last week she took a hasty survey of the apartment. Not a fern, paim or rubber plant was in sight.
"Fred, what have you done with my plants? Oh, I just know you let them burn up."
Without a word, her husband led her to the bathroom. There, packed closely together in the tub, with water all about them to the depth of several inches, were her plants.

plants.

"It was lots easier than watering them every day," explained the man triumphantly. "I took 'em out every morning while I bathed, Great scheme, wasn't it?" His wife smiled in spite of her anxisty.

"Yes, my dear—provided the water hasn't rotted away their roots."

The ice cream hat now makes its annual reappearance. This is of pure white felt, and is especially affected by the athletic girl and the college young man. The 1905 brand has the brim turned up squarely in brand has the brim turned up squarely in front and down in the back. A distinguishing mark of this year is that the front elevation is secured by a pin, and this is the glory of it all, for the pin should be the gem of your collection—your choicest fraternity or club emblem. The girl, of course, proudly flaunts a pin that her best young man has loaned her.

There is one restaurant keeper in town who holds a deep and abiding grudge against indiscriminate charity. One night he dropped into a Ninth avenue miss A woman did most of the preaching. She talked about the necessity of feeding the hungry. Since the proprietor was in that line himself, her remarks struck him as being exceedingly appropriate, and before leaving the room he gave her a check for $50. •

One evening about a week later the proprietor was astonished to see a man of the hobo type shuffle into the restaurant and take a seat at a table near the door. He summoned the head waiter.

"Hustle that fellow out of here," he said. "The chances are that he has no money, and even if he has we can't allow men of his stripe to eat here."

The head waiter spoke to the tramp. "He won't go," he reported to the pro-

The head waiter spoke to the framp.

"He won't go," he reported to the proprietor a few minutes later. "He says he's a right to be here. He's got a meal ticket.".

"Good Lord!" gasped the proprietor.

"Where'd he get it?"

"He says a lady gave it to him."

In the course of the evening twelve others representatives of the submerged class ambled in and presented credentials in the shape of meal tickets.

"It's that confounded donation to chairty," groaned the proprietor. "That woman has spent every cent of it in meal tickets at my own restaurant."

"I have just given up the hardest job I ever had in my life," said the man of many occupations. "I have been cracking eggs for a living. I had a position in a cake and cracker factory. They use eggs by and cracker factory. They use eggs by the bushel down there, and they have reduced the breaking of them to a science.

In order to avoid disagreeable accidents the eggs in a cake factory are broken into a bowi, five at a time, and then added to the general mixture. For a new hand it is rather slow business, but when a fellow becomes expert it is possible to break a thousand eggs an hour, and not smash them in wholesale bunches, either. The pay for a stunt of that kind is $1.50 a day, with sometimes a quarter extra for especial neatness." IN SOCIETY.

Mrs. Astor is to give her first functions of the Newport season this week. To-morrow and Saturday nights she will give big dinners at Beechwood, and following the latter a musicale, for which invitations have been general. Mrs. Astor will delay her return to town for a couple of weeks after the season. The ball of Mr. and Mrs. Pembroke Jones at Inchiquin on Friday night for their debutante daughter, Miss Sadie Jones, and Mrs. Astor's musicale will be the two most notable affairs of the week.

The Misses Pauline French, Edith Descon and Sadie Jones will take part in the sixteenth century dance at the fête to be given by Mr. and Mrs. E. Rollins Morse Wednesday afternoon, Aug. 23.
